kept out of the house, as are measures for disposing of soiled water, separation of waste into appropriate categories and disposal, avoiding stagnation of water, preventing the access of mosquitoes to stagnant/stored water.

In addition, habits like routine hand washing using soap, sterilization of utensils used to feed babies, drinking boiled water, washing of food before cooking, preventing access of vectors to the food, ensuring personal hygiene-periodic cutting of nails and hair, regular bathing, wearing clean clothes, proper use and disposal of sanitary napkins etc. are very much required for a healthy life.

Most often, accidents and diseases can change the status of a family from a prosperous one to a destitute one. Disease control requires concerted effort and education. So that the villagers must have knowledge or education about the present health issues or problems which are facing in the premises. Knowledge and awareness will help to control the diseases.

To improve quality in rural areas, conducting health campaigns, spreading awareness about sanitation, intake of hygienic food, balance of good nutrition and motivating the people to be educated so that rural development can be possible it leads to strengthening the country.
