What is E-learning?

Today, when people say “E-Learning”, they’re referring to training on any digital device. Watching an educational video, reading an interesting article, or taking a quiz is all that is E-Learning.

Comparing E-Learning to traditional education methods is like comparing e-book formats to paper books. Just like digital texts can’t replace the authenticity of a real book, E-Learning can’t replace full-scale education. However, it is always available as long as you have your digital device with you, and thus, it’s more convenient.

We use E-Learning daily to develop ourselves as individuals. We read articles, watch YouTube videos, and play games to exercise our brains on our smartphones. Businesses, from small startups to enterprises, also utilize E-Learning to train employees and help with internal processes.

History of e-learning

The term E-Learning was coined by US learning guru Elliott Mashie in November 1999, when he delivered his speech at the TechLearn Conference: “E-Learning is the use of network technology to design, deliver, select, administer, and extend learning.”

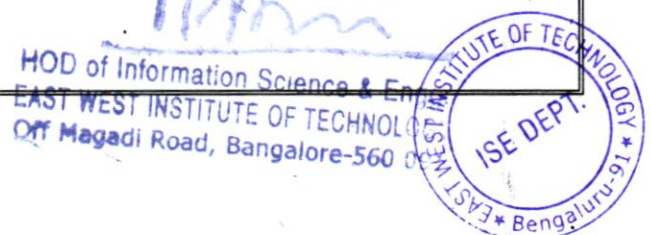

In 2000, E-Learning was revolutionized as a technology with the release of OLAT, the first open-source learning management system. That year also saw the release of the first version of SCORM, a standard that enables users to package content and distribute it within an LMS.

Benefits of E-Learning

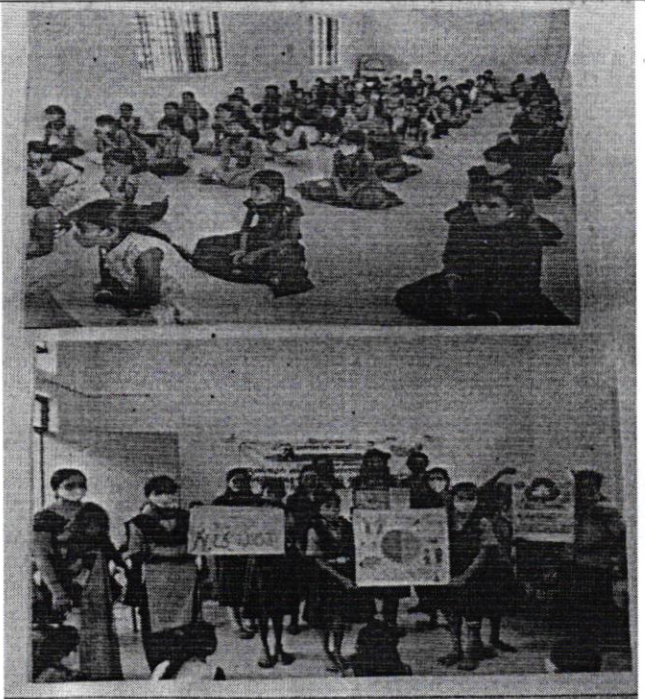

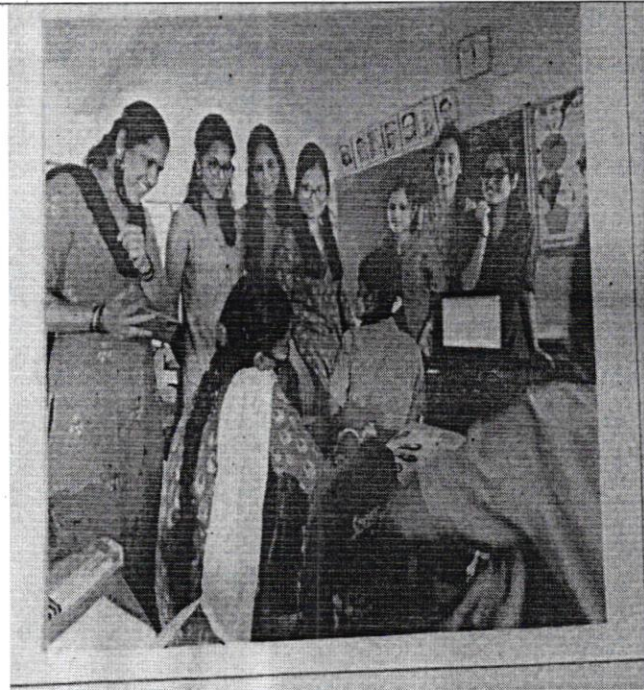

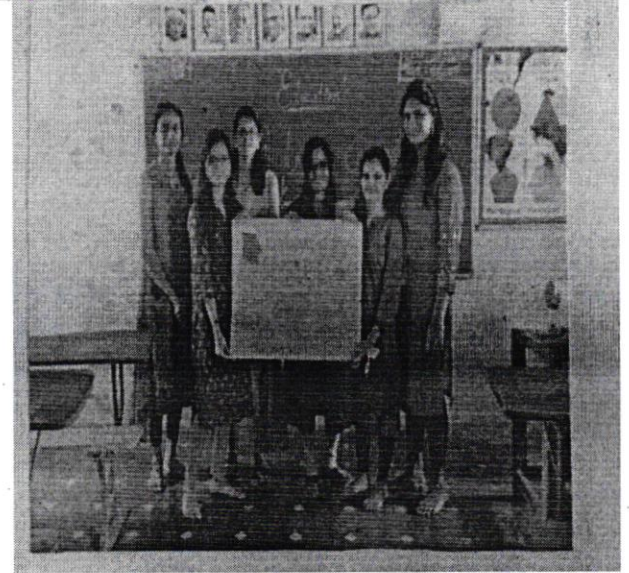

1. Effective at producing good outcomes.
2. Everywhere learning – not limited by place or time.
3. Fairer – it extends learning to more people.
4. Supports individual learning styles and needs.
5. Selfpaced.
6. Cost Effective.
7. Time Efficient.
8. Easily adaptable, yet consistent.
